

PANDAMONIUM

Why?

This city has always been organized around the flow of money for both work and consumption, with social space and the form of our lives following suit. Williamsburg, despite any pretensions to being "alternative," is no different.

Bedford, with its hip boutiques, eco-friendly stores, and music and bookshops specializing in "what's now," offers little outside of consumption and fails as a viable alternative to the status quo.

Further, the massive construction of condominiums, rent hikes, and an inundation of police patrols is rapidly transforming the social space we are a part of. This is shaping our movements and actions so that they are more in line with the drive for profit, creating a veritable prison-mall.

It's time for us to retake space and transform it in a way that suits us. This party is but a small attempt to do that, to seize space and retool it for our own purposes.

We need this, do you?
